

About the Editors

Garry R. Walz, PhD, NCC, is past director of the ERIC Counseling and Student Services Clearinghouse and a professor emeritus of the University of Michigan. He established the clearinghouse at the University of Michigan in 1966 and moved it to the University of North Carolina at Greensboro in 1993, where it continued until 2004 when the U.S. Department of Education discontinued funding for all ERIC clearinghouses. He is currently CEO of Counseling Outfitters, LLC, and CAPS Press, LLC.

Walz has authored and coauthored numerous books and articles including Promoting Student Resiliency (with Kris Bosworth, published by the ACA Foundation); Cybercounseling and Cyberlearning: Strategies for the Millennium and Cybercounseling and Cyberlearning: An Encore (both with John Bloom and published by ACA); and Measuring Up: Assessment Issues for Teachers, Counselors, and Administrators (with Janet Wall). He also initiated and directed the ERIC/CASS Virtual Libraries, including the International Career Development Library (ICDL) and the Cybercounseling Web site (jointly hosted with ACA).

He is a past president of the American Counseling Association and the Association for Counselor Education and Supervision, as well as a past chair of the Counseling and Human Development Foundation. He has been recognized through numerous awards including ACA's Gilbert and Kathleen Wrenn Humanitarian Award, the National Career Development Association's Eminent Professional Career Award, and ACA's Distinguished Professional Service Award and Fellow Award.

Jeanne C. Bleuer, PhD, NCC, is past co-director of the ERIC Counseling and Student Services Clearinghouse at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro and past associate director of the ERIC Counseling and Personnel Services Clearinghouse at the University of Michigan. She is currently CFO of Counseling Outfitters, LLC, and CAPS Press, LLC.

Bleuer has worked as a school counselor, vocational rehabilitation counselor, and social worker in a variety of settings including elementary and secondary schools, residential treatment facilities, and community counseling agencies.

She is the author of Counseling Underachievers and the coauthor of numerous publications including Activities for Counseling Underachievers, Counseling Young Students at Risk, and Assessment: Issues and Challenges for the Millennium. She and Walz have designed and conducted numerous national conferences and training workshops on assessment, comprehensive guidance programs, and the use of computers in counseling.

She has received the ACA Distinguished Professional Service Award and Fellow Award, the IAMFC Professional Development Award, the RACC Exemplary Contribution to Research in Counseling Award, the AAC Exemplary Practices Award, and the ACES Publication in Counselor Education and Supervision Award.

Richard K. Yep, MPA, is the executive director of the American Counseling Association in Alexandria, Virginia, the largest membership organization of professional counselors in the world. He currently oversees a 53-member staff and an $8 million budget. In addition to management of all staff functions, Yep works closely with ACA governance in implementing the policies that they adopt.

Yep is also the chief staff officer for the ACA Foundation. He served as ACA interim executive director for 18 months before his appointment as executive director in 1999. Prior to his most recent appointment, Yep served ACA in a variety of positions including director of government relations, assistant executive director, and senior associate executive director for corporate planning.

For more than 20 years, Yep has been involved in not-for profit organizations. He began his career in a human service agency working with the Native American population in northern Arizona as a Volunteer in Service to America (VISTA). He then went on to do direct service work in summer youth employment programs and the TRIO programs that focused on youth from underrepresented populations as they transitioned from high school to postsecondary education. He also served as project director for an Asian American AIDS education program.

Yep worked in the California State Legislature and in the U.S. Congress as a legislative assistant, where he focused on education, human service, and civil rights issues.

Yep received his bachelor's degree from the University of California, Santa Barbara, and a master's degree in public administration from the University of Southern California.
